Metro CEO Phil Washington Discusses Measure M with CCA's Executive Committee

Metro's CEO, Phillip Washington, addressed CCA's Executive Committee this afternoon. Washington shared his plans for Measure M and told the audience that CCA's advocacy regarding an Arts District Station has been effective.

Measure M is the ballot measure that voters approved in November to add a half cent sales tax to pay for various transportation projects around the county. The measure is expected to generate more than $140 billion dollars through 2050. Washington said Metro is putting together a seven-member tax payer advisory committee and a 27-member community advisory council to oversee Measure M implementation.

Washington called Measure M a "game changer" for the transportation network in Los Angeles County and also said we are becoming the "infrastructure capital of the world." With the passage of Measure M several projects are being accelerated including: an airport rail connector station, the Foothill Goldline Extension, aerial-grade separations for the Orange Line Bus rapid transit to pave the way for light rail, the West Santa Ana Branch, Crenshaw Line and the Regional Connector in Downtown. The Crenshaw Line is approximately 60% complete and a P3 partnership is being considered to add a spur to the new NFL stadium in Inglewood. Washington shared that about 20% of Rams fans took Metro to a game this season.

Washington is a supporter of P3 partnerships and welcomes unsolicited proposals from the private sector. He described P3 partnerships as a risk transference where the private sector is willing to assume the costs and liability upfront and be reimbursed by the public sector as the project is completed. Washington successfully utilized P3 partnerships in Denver to connect their airport to the city via transit and to redevelop Union Station.

Government Relations Committee

At CCA's Government Relations Committee on Thursday, members heard from Economic and Workforce Development Department General Manager Jan Perry about the City's economic development strategy RFP. And we received an update on sidewalk vending from Dennis Gleason with the Office of Councilmember Joe Buscaino.

Perry said that the RFP is intended to give the City a comprehensive strategy to leverage various resources to help drive job growth, especially in targeted areas such as Pico-Union & Boyle Heights. With the dissolution of the Community Redevelopment Agency, the City needs to determine how best to help create jobs and support businesses. The RFP is expected to be released later this winter and will ask a consultant to identify how the City can use tools such as Enhanced Infrastructure Financing Districts (EIFDs), Community Redevelopment Investment Areas (CRIAs) and the Los Angeles Development Fund to spur economic development. Work will also begin on the Economic Development Chapter of the City's General Plan.

Gleason gave the committee an update on Tuesday's Council action to create a framework that will guide subsequent City regulations on sidewalk vending. He told the audience that vending will be legal in commercial and industrial zones across the city, but with numerous restrictions. Because the Council realizes that a one-size-fits-all approach won't work for sidewalk vending throughout the City, it voted to explore ways to lower the hurdles for areas that want to opt out of a vending program. Gleason also said that the consent of the adjacent property or business owner for a vendor to set up is key to this program moving forward in Council. And enforcement is also crucial for his office and the Council. Several City departments are to report back to the Economic Development and Public Works Committees with vending program details in the spring. CCA will continue to lead the discussion on this matter.

and various other community leaders to oppose Measure S. The coalition to oppose Measure S is one of the broadest in City history and is comprised of business, union, civic and non-profit leaders.

Additionally, this week CCA hosted a phone-bank at the LA Fed to get the word out about Measure S. We shared with voters that Measure S is a badly written initiative that would ban most new housing in Los Angeles, increase rents, destroy jobs and make the homeless crisis even worse.

On Tuesday, CCA President & CEO Jessica Lall testified before the City Council on the proposed street vending framework. Lall said CCA supports the decriminalization of sidewalk vending, and the framework has many good provisions, such as property or business owners consent for a vendor to set up in front of their property. However, there is still work to do. There are areas of the city that are not conducive to vending, especially those areas with large tourist attractions, that must be withdrawn from the plan. The City Council also asked the City Attorney to amend the ordinance so that sidewalk vending is no longer a misdemeanor offense.

CCA testified at the Planning and Land Use Management Committee (PLUM) on Tuesday in support of City Planning's report that outlines a strategy to update community plans, batch general plan amendments and change the way EIR consultants are selected. City Planning will establish a list of qualified EIR consultants and developers will be required to select a consultant from that list. It is expected that City Planning will release a RFP this spring to select the EIR consultants.

CCA also spoke at PLUM about the City's proposed sign ordinance. CCA supported a City Planning option that would allow on-site digital signs on larger, contiguous properties. This policy would benefit merchants at those properties while limiting impacts to residential areas.
